NAPLES — A standing ovation from over 350 sheriffs, wives, and guests greeted Escambia County Deputy Eddie Barnard and his lovely wife, Sandra, as he was named the 1994 FSA Deputy Sheriff of the Year. The award presentation was the highlight of the formal banquet held during the Association’s 81st Annual Conference on the evening of July 12.

Barnard is a 5-year veteran of the Pensacola based sheriff’s office who has been assigned to their vice and narcotics for only 18 months. But, his relatively short term working drug users and dealers has been so successful that he has set the pace for narcotic investigators across the state.

In 1993 alone, Barnard made 96 drug-related arrests; seized $603,000 worth of illegal drugs; and confiscated $76,000 in illicit cash. And, as a direct result of spin-off investigations which came about as a direct result of the ’93 cases, Barnard has made 137 more arrests; seized over $2 million in drugs and confiscated $112,000 in cash.

“These arrests, coupled with the seizure of the drugs and cash have set the record for the most productive performance by any law enforcement officer in one year in the history of Escambia County,” noted a beaming Jim Lowman, the Sheriff of Escambia County and Barnard’s boss.

Sheriff Lowman went on to say that, “Eddie Barnard’s hard work and diligence has gained him the respect and admiration of his fellow law enforcement officers,” and further that Barnard has, without really trying, “distinguished himself as a role model for young men and women planning law enforcement careers in northwest Florida.”

In addition to a handsome plaque, Barnard was presented a check from the Association in the amount of $1,000, a symbol of the dedication and commitment that Florida’s Sheriffs have for the outstanding work of their deputies.

Two finalists also named

In addition to awarding the Deputy Sheriff of the Year Award, FSA also names two finalists for the title.

The first finalist named was Sgt. Frank Bierwiler of Hernando County Sheriff’s Office. He’s a 30-year law enforcement veteran who began his career with the New York State Police and the NY Department of Corrections.

In 1975, he moved to Brooksville and joined the sheriff’s office.

What makes Bierwiler special is his off-duty volunteerism, serving for the past 11 years as Director of Daystar Hope Center, a church-supported charity that feeds and clothes thousands of needy families each year.

Beyond 30 years of police service and a solid 11 years of volunteerism, Bierwiler was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis over 20 years ago. Shortly after his initial diagnosis in 1974, Bierwiler became paralyzed from the waist down. He spent a year on his back and took that time to re-evaluate his life and his relationship with God.

“I prayed each and every day that if I could just be given back some limited mobility that I'd use my talents to help others,” said Bierwiler. Months of therapy brought him back to where he's able to walk with the assistance of crutches under each arm, and with his pact with God sealed — Bierwiler went in search of a project he could handle with limited mobility. Daystar Hope Center came into Bierwiler's life, and the rest is history.

His boss, Sheriff Tom Mylander couldn’t be more proud. “In the course of your life, you come across a handful of people who are a notch above the rest,” the Sheriff mused. “Frank has been an inspiration to every person he’s touched, and there's no one more dedicated to helping others than Frank has been.”

What more can be said?

The second finalist was Deputy Sheriff Peter Eigo of Pinellas County.

Eigo’s story began at 2:00 AM on the morning of August 1, 1993, when he and his canine “Major” were dispatched to a burglary in progress. Upon arrival, they began to track 2 suspects who fled from a vehicle after a short pursuit by other deputies.

They tracked one suspect for several hundred yards to a 3rd floor outside hallway. Upon confronting the suspect, Eigo was shoved aside by the suspect who then attempted to jump from the 3rd floor balcony. Eigo grabbed the suspect, but the suspect elbowed him in the nose - broke away and ran.

Injured and bleeding profusely, and despite what was later diagnosed as a broken nose and broken cheekbone, Eigo and his canine partner continued to pursue the suspect. In time, Eigo located the suspect fighting with and later injuring another deputy.

Eigo advised the suspect to stop beating the deputy or he would cut the dog loose. The suspect kept fighting until the canine grabbed him. Eigo then handcuffed the first suspect.

Then, after securing the first prisoner, Eigo and the dog took off for suspect number two, tracking him into a swamp. The suspect was ordered to stop, but to no avail.

The canine was cut loose on the second suspect and, in short order, other deputies were able to handcuff the second suspect. Only then did Eigo seek medical assistance for his terrible facial injury.

“I'm still amazed that Deputy Eigo was able to continue in his pursuit despite the terrible pain from which he was suffering,” noted Sheriff Everett Rice, Eigo’s boss.

“Here is a deputy, covered in his own blood and suffering from broken bones in his face and nose, still in full-speed foot pursuit of two dangerous suspects... anyone else would have, and probably should have, dropped out of the race... but not Peter Eigo...”

These prize-winning deputies are testament to the courage, dedication and bravery which makes up the thousands of men and women who stand between the citizens and the criminal element - the Deputy Sheriffs of Florida.

EDITOR’S CORNER
By Tom Berlinger

An idea whose time had come . . .

It is pretty much a given that of the thousands of readers of APB, few may ever be afforded the opportunity to attend statewide sheriff’s conference.

Observing the action from the sidelines can yield an interesting study of people, friendship, brotherhood, alliances, politics, and peer pressure. Watch long enough and you’ll sometimes get to see history in the making. An idea or concept is tossed out. Others pick up on it. And, before long, millions of people worldwide hear about it. All of which leads me to Sheriff Charlie Wells of Manatee County.

For those who don’t know him, let me lay some groundwork. He’s a “policeman’s policeman” personified; a hard-line, hard-nosed long-time former trooper and police chief. Without a shirt, he’d look like Hercules.

At a conference in ’93, I watched intensely as Wells stood before his peers, choking back tears as he talked from the heart about a new experiment he was conducting—the founding and operating of a “boot camp” for juveniles. He was focused on how it has changed the way he thinks about some juvenile offenders—and the way some now think about him. You couldn’t help but be moved.

You really had to be there to appreciate it. The arguably “macho-est” sheriff we have, talking with a lump in his throat opening “a rehab center for young punks,” as many would surely think it to be. As he took to the podium, Wells knew that the mere mention of a sheriff running a treatment program for juveniles might be met by many with a “Charlie, are you nuts?” kind of reception.

Maybe it was the topic. Maybe the delivery.

But, the words coming from Wells’ mouth went off like the shot heard ‘round the world. The concept of the sheriff-run, boot camp for juveniles was born. It would receive worldwide attention, and sheriffs in Florida and elsewhere would clamor for a boot camp of their own.

I’d stake next month’s paycheck that there are still some “Charlie, are you nuts?” feelings out there. But, I believe that there are many more who have sat back in their quiet times and mused that they wished they’d have thought of it first. In fact, I’m certain of it.

Charlie Wells was installed as FSA President on July 12, 1994.

FSA Scholarship winners announced

NAPLES — The 1994 FSA scholarship winners were announced at the FSA Annual Conference held here July 10-13.

The first was Dawn Melissa Moore, the daughter of Deputy Sheriff Julia V. Moore of Alachua County. Dawn will be a senior this year at Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton, majoring in psychology. Long-range, Dawn intends to go to law school, and she hopes to use her law degree to work with the FBI.

The second winner was Bart A. Brooks, the son of Capt. Charlie and Pamela Brooks of Leon County. Bart will be a junior this year at Florida State University in Tallahassee, and he’s majoring in criminology. Bart’s long-term goals include the pursuit of a career in law enforcement.

The final winner was Kimberly Marie Yaeger, the daughter of Major Tom and Carol Wallace of Lee County. Kimberly will be a freshman this year at Edison Community College in Fort Myers. Kimberly wants to eventually work towards earning a master’s degree in criminology/psychology, and maybe one day work in the FBI’s behavioral science unit.

Congratulations and best wishes to them all!
A RACE TO THE CHECKERED FLAG

The First Annual North Central Florida Sheriffs Championship Challenge raised over $8,000 for the Florida Sheriffs Youth Ranches' boys and girls.

The challenge was issued. "Bring your checkbook and your sense of humor, because you're going to need both," declared Bradford County Sheriff Bob Milner, "we're going to race to the finish for all the youngsters at the Florida Sheriffs Youth Ranches."

And that they did! Among the racers: Levy County Sheriff Ted Glass; Hamilton County Sheriff Harrell Reid; Bradford County Sheriff Bob Milner; Gilchrist County Sheriff Jim Floyd; Clay County Sheriff Scott Lancaster; and Union County Sheriff Jerry Whitehead. Each Sheriff was encouraged to secure sponsorships in support of the Florida Sheriffs Youth Ranches.

"We will see who has the bragging rights when the checkered flag falls." said Sheriff Whitehead smugly. In the end, it was Sheriff Lancaster who took first place; Sheriff Milner, "Mr. Challenge," finished a close second.

The true winners are the boys and girls of Florida. We thank each and every Sheriff for their support and look forward to next year and duplicating this year's success.

Sheriffs oppose casino gambling

At their recent statewide conference in Naples, the sheriffs unanimously passed a resolution opposing any form of casino gambling in Florida.

Taking notice of the inherent crime problems which come with casino gambling, the sheriffs cited the fact that crime has more than tripled in Atlantic City (while the population actually decreased by 20%), since casino gambling was brought to town. The sheriffs felt that casinos in Florida are not the salvation for Florida's slumping tourist industry which they are touted to be.

"No matter how you look at it, casino gambling will cost the state of Florida far more (in criminal justice costs alone) than the state could possibly derive from the revenues generated by casino operations," noted Manatee Sheriff Charlie Wells, the newly-elected President of FSA.

A study commissioned by FDLE noted that in Central City, Colorado (population 350), a far cry from the Atlantic City or Las Vegas type scenes, casino gambling caused their police force to grow from two to ten, and calls for assistance increased a whopping 423% from 1991 to 1992 alone!

With the spinning of rubber on a dust-filled track, Sheriff's volunteered their time in support of the Youth Ranches.

On a mild spring evening in late April, to the thunder of engines and roar of the crowd, several brave men took to the Bay County Speedway for the first annual Florida Sheriff's Youth Ranches '100' Stock Car Race. Among the participants, representing law enforcement agencies throughout North Florida: acting sponsor Sheriff Guy Tunnell of Bay County; Sheriff Larry Gilbert of Okaloosa County; Sheriff Danny Hasty of Washington County; Sheriff John Braxton of Holmes County; Sheriff John McDaniel of Jackson County; and Police Chief David Messer of Lynn Haven.

Upon the completion of heated laps around the speedway in the name of charity, the muddied stock cars raced across the finish line to the wave of a checkered flag, and a winner was declared. Ironically, among the many Sheriffs entered in the contest, the lone Police Chief from Lynn Haven was crowned and awarded the trophy for a first place finish. "It's always nice to beat those guys," said the winner of his victory, "but we're all really out here for the same reason, we're out here for the kids, that's what counts."

"ZAPPER" BELT

IS ALTERNATIVE TO HANDCUFFS IN COURT

An elastic belt which can be hidden under an inmate's shirt is now being used as an alternative to handcuffs in some court systems. The inmate is controlled by a battery pack which can give him a 50,000-volt burst of current into his back if he tries to flee or attacks someone. The remote control sensor which triggers the electrical charge is held by the bailiff who is escorting the inmate to and from his court appearance.

In court, the inmates appears to be "free" since there are no shackles, handcuffs or leg irons. Some criminal defense lawyers like the "zapper," because it takes the edge off adverse pretrial publicity that shackles may help to create.

In 1993, 3 inmates were known to be zapped by the belt. While the effect was devastatingly painful while it lasted, there was no permanent damage.

The zapper works by sending an 8-second burst of current into the inmate's back muscles, completely disabling him for 30 seconds or more.

It's attached to a four-inch elastic belt that fastens around the inmate's waist with Velcro; and a battery pack rests above one kidney. If the inmate misbehaves or attempts to flee, the officer holding the remote control (similar to a garage door remote) simply presses a button and the inmate is dropped.

Some defense lawyers, however, are opposed to the use of the device, arguing that it amounts to cruel and unusual punishment administered by an officer making a split-second decision.

And, the states of New Jersey, Massachusetts, Michigan and Hawaii have barred the use of "stun technology" both by civilians and law enforcement.

(For further information on the zapper belt, contact Mr. Duane Rutledge at Justice Systems, Inc., a Florida supplier. Rutledge can be reached at (407) 645-0221.)

Volunteer Bailiffs Ease Court Load

By Orval Jackson, Staff Writer
Tampa Tribune

Background checks are being run by the Hillsborough County SO on seven people who have volunteered to work as unpaid bailiffs in the court system under a new program first proposed last year.

Sgt. Don Whitlock said the names of the candidates will not be made public until after they are found to be qualified and are accepted into the program. Once they are accepted, the volunteers will have an indoctrination program before being assigned to courthouse duty. Details of the training program still are being worked out, Whitlock said.

The use of volunteers to handle matters not concerning inmates will free the professionals of many of the duties they now carry out: fielding questions from the public, escorting panels of potential jurors and helping to maintain decorum in the courtroom.

The volunteer bailiffs will be assigned to assist the certified sheriff's deputies who work in the courts. The sheriff's office now has 85 full-time bailiffs working for 43 circuit and county court judges in Tampa and Plant City.

The volunteers will be provided with the same sheriff's department green blazer, black trousers and black tie, but will not carry weapons or handcuffs, nor work, with inmates and defendants.

Whitlock said at least two of the candidates have law enforcement experience. He said one was a bailiff in the Hillsborough County system for five years. No background information was given on the others.

Whitlock anticipates the volunteers will work eight to 10 hours a week as needed. Further, he said the need for help is strongest on jury selection days, when panels of prospective jurors are shuttled back and forth between the main courthouse on Pierce Street and the courthouse annex on Jefferson Street, where the criminal trials are conducted.

Once the volunteers become familiar with the court buildings and proceedings, they will replace a full-time bailiff at an information station midway along the first floor hallway of the annex, according to Whitlock.

The Hillsborough program will be patterned after the successful system started in Marion County in early 1993 and will be the third in West Central Florida. Citrus County initiated its program in February. Officials in Marion and citrus counties are high in praise of their programs.

"It's very successful," said Marion County sheriff's Cpl. Robert Durden, one of the bailiff supervisors. "They really do a great job. We haven't had any problems at all."

Citrus County sheriff's Capt. Oren "Woody" Woodward had nothing but praise for his volunteer bailiffs.

"Several of the bailiffs have already put in way in excess of 100 hours since the beginning of the program in February," he said. "We're real pleased with them."

Final approval to move forward with the plan in Hillsborough County came after Sheriff Cal Henderson and Capt. Richard Cipriano, commander of the judicial services bureau, met with the judges to outline the program in early April.

Discussions are underway to determine precisely what the volunteers will be taught during their orientation, but officials say much of the learning will be on-the-job training. Class topics are expected to include first aid and CPR training, and courtroom procedures.

Durden said the volunteers' work schedules are flexible and planned around the lifestyles of the participants. He said all are retired, with an average age of 70, and because of their personal nature, are involved in several volunteer programs.

Durden also said that some work more hours than others, ranging from 8 to 20 hours a week. "It all depends on how much we need them."

Briefly . . .

Florida's jail count grows

On average, there were almost 38,000 inmates held in Florida's county jails at any given time during June. Pre-trial detainees accounted for 57%, and 28% were sentenced on either felony or misdemeanor crimes. The balance were probation violators and array of other problematic folks. Just last December, the average daily jail population was almost 5,000 less than now.

In case you wondered, Dade County had the highest daily population in June with 6,246 — Liberty County the least, with 15.

Immigration plans

Sheriffs and chiefs of the coastal areas in Indian River, St. Lucie, Martin, Palm Beach, Broward, Dade, and Monroe counties, along with FOLE Mutual Aid Director Jack Fenwick and INS officials met recently to discuss the Mass Immigration Plan and their anticipated role.

Miami INS Director Dan Cadman asked each agency to provide his office with a list of officers who could be deputized by the US Marshall's Service in the event of a Mass Immigration emergency. Training on federal law and INS procedures is being developed for all affected agencies.

Early release tracking

FOLE, the Attorney General's office and DOC are working together to assure that info reflecting that an individual has been released early is available through FCIC. Amazingly, approximately 300 inmates are released each early each week. The inclusion of this data as part of the FCIC system response immediately provides law enforcement with information which might assist on-going investigations or with information to be presented to the judge at first appearance.

Statewide certification exams

There have been problems across the state with candidates for law enforcement and corrections applicants not being able to pass the state exam required for certification.

During the period from October thru December 1993, the passage rate was 66% for law enforcement, and 49% for corrections. But, for the January through March 1994 quarter, the passage rate rose to 73% for law enforcement and 59% for corrections.
Wells is new FSA President

Manatee County Sheriff Charlie Wells was honored at FSA's Annual Conference in Naples in July by being elected the Association's President for 94-95.

After nearly sixteen years with the Florida Highway Patrol, a year as a state attorney investigator, and two years as police chief of Bradenton, Wells was elected sheriff in 1984. He's now in his third term as Manatee County's top cop.

"When I was first elected sheriff, the feeling of pride and sense of accomplishment I remember having was indescribable," said a beaming Wells after his installation, "now, ten years later, my fellow sheriffs have chosen me as their President — and that feeling is back again."

In the past few years, Wells has gained a statewide reputation as a pathfinder on criminal justice issues. He's the founding father and frequent spokesman for the statewide movement known as "STOP," an acronym for Stop Turning Out Prisoners.

Since its inception, STOP has eyed the lofty goal of keeping dangerous felons in prison for at least 85% of their original sentence, and in a state like Florida with an ever-growing prison population and the #1 crime rate of all states in the nation, they've got their hands full.

He's also the overseer of the first of several county juvenile "Boot Camps" to have sprung up recently due to our profuse juvenile crime problem.

Sheriff Wells said he looks forward to a productive year as President, particularly in working on FSA's legislative package during the '95 session. But, he suggests that he can't do it alone, and that he'll be enlisting the aid of all sheriffs to make it work.

Florida: Serious About Safety

The month of May brought the issue of highway teen fatalities to the forefront in Florida. The week of May 9 was dedicated "Student Safety Week," in which an estimated 8,800 high school students across the state were busy creating and implementing awareness programs.

Developed by the Partners for Highway Safety Foundation, the program is intended to involve students in identifying highway safety problems in their schools and to create awareness programs to address those problems.

"We're very excited with the participation and the results," says Paul Burris, president of Partners for Highway Safety. "We did very little, We provided suggestions to the students, [gave] them support materials and solicited local businesses for funding. The students did all the work."

Central Florida High School students passed out numbered hospital wristbands with the message, "Buckle Up." Students wore the bands all week and held daily door prize drawings in which students claimed their prizes by showing their wrist bands.

Students in Perry, Florida, held a mock car crash during Student Safety Week in which several students were "injured" and one was "killed." They carried out the scenario by having the "injured students use wheelchairs for the week, and a mock funeral was held for the student who had been "killed" in the crash.

Local businesses became involved in Student Safety Week, which helped elevate community awareness. In Tallahassee, funds were donated for T-shirts for students and employees by Allstate Insurance and AmSouth Banks and by Progressive Insurance in southern Florida's Broward County.

In recognition of this serious issue and students' efforts to reduce highway fatalities, Governor Lawton Chiles proclaimed the second week of May as Student Safety Week statewide. "We have been extremely pleased," said Burris, "not only because of the student and community involvement, but because Florida is the first state whose governor has proclaimed Student Safety Week an official week."

The second week of May was chosen because of the abundance of proms and graduations. "We hope that these programs will be fresh on the minds of these young men and women during those special times."

If you wish to learn more about this program, please contact Susan Fairbrother at (904) 385-0953 in Tallahassee.
FHP halts “spraying” of troopers

A lieutenant with the Florida Highway Patrol is challenging FHP’s policy to give their troopers a blast of pepper spray in the face during routine training exercises. He has sued FHP in Leon County Circuit Court, and alleged that spraying him and other troopers in the face “just to see what’s like” is harmful, and he suggests that it could pose a permanent health risk.

On July 1, Judge Kevin Davey stayed further court proceedings in the case after DHSMV agreed to halt the training procedure pending a meeting with the State Department of Labor to determine whether the training violates any Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations as adopted by the Division of Safety of the Florida Department of Labor and Employment Security.

FHP officials have responded by noting that they were merely following widely accepted training practices in spraying the troopers, “so that they understood the effects of the spray and proper aftercare.”

Law enforcement officers who oppose the practice of getting sprayed mentioned that their agency issues them handguns, but does not require that each officer be shot with the gun just to be educated in the potential results of shooting someone.

Since the issue will be decided in the courts and/or through administrative processes in the near future, PSA Deputy General Counsel Elektra Theodorides has issued an opinion to at least one sheriff’s office recently, suggesting that they, too, suspend spraying the officers during training exercises until a decision is rendered.

We’ll keep you posted on the developments.

Sorry
Mr. Eastwood... the filing deadline has passed

In what could be a scene right out of High Noon (or Blazing Saddles), a candidate for sheriff in Fargo, ND has challenged his opponents to a shootout, claiming it’s a test of their ability to protect the public.

Ken Schwab wants the four other candidates to meet him at a local shooting range with the gun of their choice. Each will fire 24 rounds at targets to determine who is the most accurate. Schwab, who works as a probation officer, said incumbent Sheriff Don Rudnick declined the offer, saying it would be nothing more than a circus. Candidate Steve Dawson, an assistant state’s attorney, said he’ll be there, as did Budd Warren, a deputy sheriff.

However, it may be difficult for the fourth candidate in the election to make it. Ron Brakke, a well-known local tax protester, is a convicted felon who, by virtue of his conviction, is prohibited from possessing a firearm.
